SKATE

Dipturus batis

Description: Skates are bottom-dwelling cartilaginous fish related to sharks. They are easily distinguished by their flat, diamond or kite-like bodies, large wing-like pectoral fins, and short, fleshy tails. Unlike stingrays, skates lack stinging barbs and are harmless to humans.

Habitat: They can be found at a wide range of depths, from shallow coastal shallows to the extreme deep sea (down to 3,000 meters/9,840+ feet). They are more diverse at higher latitudes and in cold, deep waters.

Harvesting: Skate fish are primarily harvested in two ways: commercially for human consumption (focusing on their pectoral fins or “wings”) and for lobster or crab bait.
